The least popular job among Koreans in their 20s and 30s are those that require overtime work.

Job search portal Saramin surveyed 2,708 people aged 20 to 39 and found that 31.5 percent shun jobs that require work at night or the weekend.

The result reflects growing preferences among the younger generation for a balance between life and work.

The second least favored jobs were ones that pay little with 23.5 percent, followed by jobs with rigid, militaristic hierarchy (19.5 percent).

Respondents cited the physical and mental stress such jobs entail, a lack of personal life and worries about job security. About 31.5 percent of the respondents said they would choose to work for such companies if they got an offer, mostly because of the current job market.
